GENDER AND EMPLOYMENT POLICIES

17 MARCH – 11 APRIL 2025

4 WEEKS, 24 LEARNING HOURS

Information Note

BACKGROUND

Despite notable advances in gender equality at work over the past decades, employment trends continue to point towards deficiencies in decent work opportunities for women. Women's rights to work and rights at work are not guaranteed, even in the most advanced economies. Gender pay gaps; sectoral and occupational segregation; a lack of access to good quality care services, and the unequal sharing of care responsibilities between women and men persist and have in some cases exacerbated. To address these challenges, gender-responsive and integrated employment policies are needed.

Gender-responsive employment policies are those that explicitly address gender inequalities through the creation of full, productive and freely chosen employment for all. The ILO argues for taking a comprehensive and integrated policy approach towards employment promotion, based on a recognition that employment outcomes depend on a wide array of factors, and that markets alone might not be able to create enough decent employment opportunities, especially for women. Gender equality objectives help in overcoming the structural challenges that hold women back in the labour market.

Gender-responsive macroeconomic policies can explicitly promote gender equality through fiscal and monetary policies, and gender-responsive sectoral policies can lead to a gender-equitable structural transformation. Investments in the care economy, in turn, create employment (particularly for women) while at the same time helping remove some of the barriers women face in engaging in the labour market.

Recognizing the crucial link between gender and employment, this course, organized by the Employment Policy and Analysis Programme of the ITCILO in collaboration with the Gender Group (EMPLAB) in Employment Policy Department of the ILO, aims to equip participants with the knowledge needed to produce gender-responsive employment diagnostics, highlighting the impact of macroeconomic, sectoral and employment policies on women's inclusion in the labour market. And will provide tools to design and implement gender-responsive employment policies. It will also provide participants with tools to make the economic and employment case for investments in care economy.

COURSE OBJECTIVES

This online course offers the opportunity to learn how to address gender inequalities in the labour market through gender-responsive and integrated approaches, with an emphasis in demand-side challenges.

The objective of this course is to equip participants with a comprehensive understanding of key concepts and analytical frameworks related to gender and employment. This course highlights the impacts and challenges of gender-responsive employment policies, including macroeconomic policies, sectoral policies, and National Employment Policies (NEPs) policies. This training also provides practical guidance on designing and implementing gender-responsive employment policies and programs that promote decent work for all.

CONTENT

The course will consist of the following four Modules:

Module 1 – Gender-responsive Macroeconomic Policies

This module will present an overview of gender-responsive employment policies and identify the impacts and challenges of implementing gender-responsive macroeconomic policies, by dealing with the following issues:

- What employment policies have to do with gender equality?
- How can we promote gender-responsive macroeconomic policies and how can we analyse their impacts?
- What kind of gender biases exist in mainstream macroeconomic policies?

Module 2 – Gender-responsive Sectoral Policies

Gender-responsive sectoral policies are crucial to address gender inequalities in employment. To design gender-responsive sectoral policies, this module will discuss the following issues:

- Why are gender-responsive sectoral policies important?
- How can we design gender-responsive sectoral policies?
- How can we prioritise the sectors and identify the barriers for gender-responsive sectoral policies?

Module 3 – Public Investments in the Care Economy

This module will identify how public investment in care services contribute for creating decent jobs, inclusive growth and reduce gender inequalities, by answering to the following questions:

- How can public investments in the care economy ensure jobs generation and reducing gender gaps?
- How to identify the coverage gaps in care services and estimate the required resources?
- How can we assess the economic returns of investing in care?

Module 4 – Gender-responsive employment policy frameworks

This module will explore the framework for effectively crafting genderresponsive comprehensive employment policy frameworks, by answering to the following key questions:

- How can comprehensive employment policy frameworks address the gendered structure of the economy?
- What stages are involved in creating gender-responsive comprehensive employment policy frameworks?
- How can a gender perspective be integrated into all stages of the employment policy design and implementation?

WHO ATTENDS THIS COURSE?

This course is designed for:

Policy makers, policy advisors, planners, technical officials and other technical experts from institutions working in the areas of employment and of gender;

Government officials from Ministries of Labour and other line ministries, including Ministries of Economy, Finance, Planning and Central Banks;

Representatives of workers' and employers' organizations;
